

Vocabulary Collage (Grades 7-12)

In this sample activity, students create a collage, title it with a made-up word based on root words, prefixes and suffixes, and write a short explanatory text about their piece. This is a good example of how to integrate art into an activity that builds literacy skills.

Duration: 1 week or longer (can be extended)

Learning Goals

- Understand how root words, prefixes and suffixes can be used to discern the meaning of a word
- Become familiar with the meanings of common root words, pre-fixes and suffixes
- Practice writing explanatory texts

Materials Needed

- Black/whiteboard or chart paper on easel
- Copies of Root Words, Prefixes and Suffixes (see attached)
- Student-friendly magazines, e.g. Time for Kids, Highlights, etc.
- Scissors
- Poster board
- Glue
- Writing paper
- Pens or pencils
- Large index cards

Preparation

- Set a date and invite family and community members to a student art event.
- Set up room for small group work (3-5 individuals per group) in arts and crafts
- Print one copy of Root Words, Prefixes and Suffixes per group
- Distribute supplies so that each group has a few magazines, a poster board, some glue and scissors; set aside writing paper and pencils/pens until after collages are completed
- Bring in example or print picture of transformer toy and write “transformer” on the black/whiteboard or chart paper on easel

What to Do

- Engage students by asking them to guess how the “transformer toy” got its name. Hint that they can discover the answer by looking at the handout. Show them how each word part in “transformer” has a meaning that when put together explains the way the toy works: <trans> = across, over; <form> = to make, <er> = a person, thing performing an act
- Explore the Root Words, Prefixes and Suffixes handout with the students. Have them brainstorm other examples of words that use the root words, prefixes or suffixes on the sheet and ask them to explain how knowing the meaning of the word part helps them decode the meaning of the word. Record these example words and their word part(s) on the black/whiteboard or chart paper.

- Explain to the students that they will be creating a collage, giving it a name using a combination of the word parts on the handout, and writing a short explanatory text about their collage. Their collages will form an art display for family and community members. For example, if students put together a collage of different scenes from around the world and a machine made up of various parts, they might name it “trans-geoscope,” a machine that can look across the world. Their text would clearly and accurately explain what the collage represents and how it got its title.
- Organize students into small groups. Encourage groups to spend five minutes looking over the magazines for pictures to inspire their collage. Each group should work together to make a collage that is as creative and unique as possible. As each group completes their collage, give them some paper and writing utensils and have them try out different combination of word parts to title their work. After students agree on a title, have them collaborate on writing an informational text that explains what their collage represents and how the collage got its title. The title of the collage, the names of the artists, and a final copy of the text should be written neatly on an index card and displayed next to the collage, similar to a display card in a museum.
- Present the collages to family and community members at a student art event. Have each group stand by their collage and explain their piece to visitors.
- Extend learning if time allows: Give small groups newspaper articles or other short informational texts and have a competition to see which group can find the most words with word parts from the handout in a pre-determined amount of time. Students can also create sculptures for this activity using clay, found objects, etc.

Evaluate (Outcomes to Look For)

- Students recognize word parts in the words they encounter
- Students identify how word parts convey the meaning of a word
- Students work collaboratively to create an art piece
- Student write an explanatory text that conveys their ideas and information about their collage clearly and accurately
